Document Approval System

Employee Submits Report:

- The employee adds document like expense report as attached receipts.

Automated Validation:

- Upon submission, the system automatically validates the expense report against predefined rules and policies.

Routing and Approval Workflow:

- Once the expense report passes validation, the system routes it through an approval workflow based on predefined rules and hierarchy.
- The workflow determines the sequence of approvers and their respective approval levels.
- For example, expense reports below a certain threshold may require approval from a direct supervisor, while reports above the threshold may require approval from the finance department.

Notification and Approval:

- Approvers receive notifications via email or the system's notification feature when expense reports are awaiting their approval.
- If approved, the expense report moves to the next approver in the workflow. If rejected, the system notifies the employee of the rejection reason and allows them to revise and resubmit the report.

Escalation and Exception Handling:

- In case of delays or inaction from approvers, the system automatically escalates pending approvals to higher-level authorities or alternate approvers.
- Approvers can add comments or notes to explain their decisions, which are logged in the system for audit purposes.

Final Approval and Reimbursement:

- Once all required approvals are obtained, the expense report is marked as approved, and the reimbursement process is initiated.
- The finance department processes the approved expense reports for reimbursement, either through payroll or direct payment to the employee.

Reporting and Analytics:

- The system generates reports and analytics on expense report processing times, approval rates, policy compliance, and other relevant metrics.
- Managers and administrators can use these insights to identify bottlenecks, optimize workflows, and improve the overall efficiency of the expense management process.
